Latest News Developments

South Africa's inflation rate rose to a seven-month high in January driven by higher fuel prices. Consumer-price growth quickened to 4.5% from 4% in December, Statistics South Africa said Wednesday in a statement. The increase is unlikely to put pressure on the central bank to pursue tight monetary policy as it sees the rate averaging 4.7% this year, before stabilizing at 4.5% from the third quarter of 2021. The monetary policy committee reduced its benchmark interest rate to the lowest level in four years in January and its quarterly projection model implies another cut of 25 basis points in fourth quarter of the year. The rate has now been at or below the target's midpoint, where the central bank prefers it, for 14 months. The January number extends the longest streak in 14 years of inflation being at or below 4.5%. Inflation was driven by an increase in fuel price in January. The cost of gasoline was 15% higher than in the same month last year. Annual core inflation, which excludes the prices of food, non-alcoholic drinks, fuel and electricity, slowed to 3.7%, the lowest level since June 2011.

The South African government's plans to expropriate land without compensation would be disastrous for the economy, US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said. The policy proposal is an example of centralised planning that has failed in other African states like Zimbabwe, Tanzania and Ethiopia. South Africa is debating an amendment to permit the expropriation of private property without compensation, which would be disastrous for that economy, and most importantly for the South African people. The US Secretary of State further indicated that African economies need "strong rule of law, respect for property rights, regulation that encourages investment" for inclusive and sustainable economic growth. The rand has proved sensitive to White House comments on the issue in the past. It slumped in August 2018 after President Donald Trump asked the secretary of state to "closely study the South African land and farm seizures and expropriations. As long as the US doesn't threaten sanctions against South Africa, the domestic news flow about South Africa's failing state-owned entities and political inability to deal with the problem is enough to keep the rand on the back foot," said Per Hammarlund, a strategist at SEB in Stockholm. "Pompeo's comments are not threatening enough to make a bad situation worse for the rand.

Minister in the Presidency Jackson Mthembu is set to meet with the South African Statistics Council over funding concerns for Stats SA, following a threat to resign by the advisory body. Mthembu and Statistician-General Risenga Maluleke have also been negotiating with Finance Minister Tito Mboweni, and National Treasury has provided "partial additional funding" to the national statistical agency which will become available in April, according to a statement issued by Mthembu's spokesperson, Nonceba Mhlauli. The Statistician-General is currently looking at reprioritisations as a result of the allocation that will come into effect on 1 April 2020. The South African Statistics Council which endorses data released by Statistics South Africa and advises the statistician-general had threatened to step down if Stats SA did not receive more funding and fill frozen posts. The council is appointed by the minister in the presidency. It is independent of Stats SA.
