Directorate: Statistics & Economic Analysis

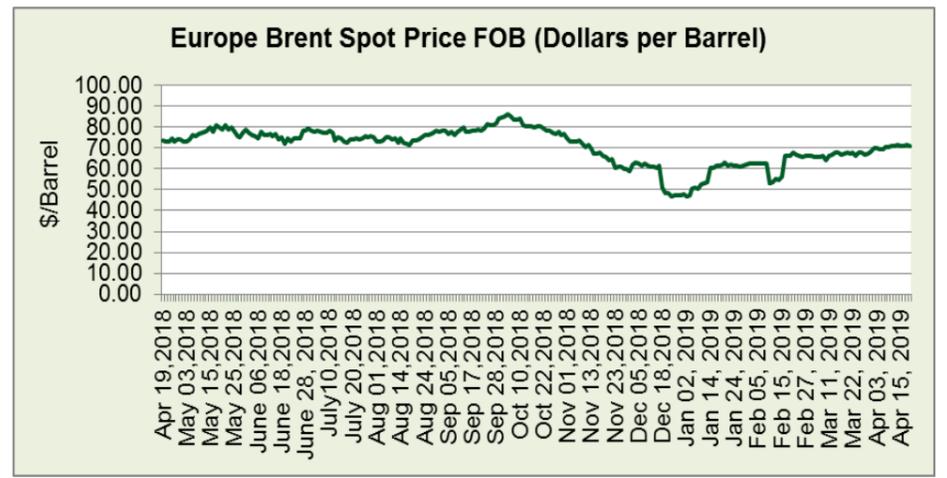

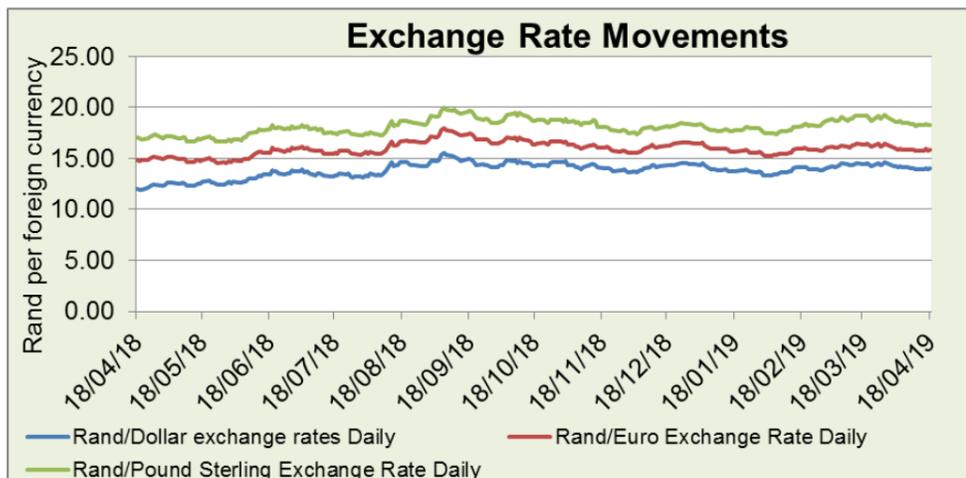

Sub-directorate: Economic Analysis

Both domestic and international markets prices for major grains have decreased this week compared to the previous week. The local prices for yellow maize, soybean, sunflower seed and sorghum decreased by 0.25%, 0.12%, 0.11% and 1.7%, respectively while white maize and Wheat increased marginally by 0.28% and 0.1% respectively during the reporting period. South Africa's 2018/19 soybean production as weather conditions have largely been favourable in most soybean-growing areas which placed the potential harvest at 1.3 million tonnes. The recent rains in some sunflower seed growing areas could help reduce the occurrence of frost, but might not have boosted the yields as the crop had already matured. The current expected harvest is down by 35% from the previous season. All international prices for major grains declined this week compared to last week. The prices of maize, wheat and soybean decreased by 0.24%, 1.77% and 0.94% respectively week-on-week.

Latest News Developments

On 23 April, the rand posted its biggest decline in almost a month, which together with an oil price that surged to its highest level in 2019 may signal more bad news for SA consumers ahead of May's elections. SA's currency has lost almost 2% since the last trading day before the long weekend, dragged down by disclosure of a R5bn emergency bailout for Eskom after a Chinese loan did not arrive on time. The emergency rescue further highlighted risks posed to the economy by Eskom's financial crisis. The rand had dropped 1.15%, the biggest decline since March 27, to R14.3264/$ by 5.25pm. This made it the worst-performing emerging-market currency tracked by Bloomberg. Since reaching its 2019 best of R13.2349/$ on January 31, it has lost 6% against its US counterpart. It was 0.55% weaker at R18.5057/£, while it had fallen 0.57% to R16.0353/€. The rand's decline was accompanied by a jump of as much as 0.8% in Brent crude oil, which could see motorists hit by another fuel hike, in addition to the 15% increase in 2019 so far. Crude reached its highest level since November after the US decided to end a sanctions waiver on Iranian oil imports. The price rose to $74.57 a barrel as the JSE closed on Tuesday 23 April 2019, compared with $54.11 at the start of the year, as the US said it would demand that India, China, Japan and South Korea stop importing from Iran. A weaker rand worsens the outlook for inflation by pushing up the cost of imported goods priced in dollars, such as oil. The currency's volatility and the potential to push prices higher has been one of the factors leading to the Reserve Bank remaining hawkish on interest rates as it seeks to keep inflation near the middle of its 3%-6% target range. Movements in the currency and international oil prices indicate the petrol price may rise another 56c/l, while diesel is showing a reduction of 5c and illuminating paraffin is down by a cent, in May, according to the Central Energy Fund. That is more bad news for an economy that is struggling to grow and to make a dent in an unemployment rate of more than 27%. Volatility in the rand could rise due to quiet trade, with subdued activity around the public holidays this week and next, said Mercato Financial Services analyst Nico du Plessis.

Interest rates are likely to remain unchanged at next month's meeting of the Monetary Policy Committee of the SA Reserve Bank, according to Sanisha Packirisamy, an economist at Momentum Investments. The MPC will start its three-day meeting on May 21. Reserve Bank governor Lesetja Kganyago is expected to make the repo rate announcement on the afternoon of May 23. The positive downward trajectory in inflation expectations, alongside weaker-than-expected growth, has likely lowered the pressure on the central bank to maintain a tightening bias.
